Advice to the Lovelorn

Some Questions From Girls and Boys
Who Feel the Need of Advice
In Heart Affairs
By Beatrice Fairfax

"I AM in love with a girl of my own age, which is 20," writes a young man who signs himself "K," "and though I have seen her only three times, she allowed me to kiss her when we parted. Can a love like that be true?"

"None ever loved but at first sight they loved," wrote George Chapman, and the poet who knew more of the human heart than any since his time, Shakespeare, held that love at sight was the supreme test. He wrote: "No sooner met but they looked; no sooner looked but they loved; no sooner loved but they kissed; and no sooner kissed but they fell in love."

The times have changed. The human heart is just the same impulsive organ it always was, but the head has grown wiser. The head warns against love at first sight, or, if that is beyond control, against its manifestation. The girl may love you truly; I hope she does, but it would be better for her sake not to kiss at the third meeting.

Another Case.
"Miss Impulsive" had received the attentions of a man four months. He told her he loved her. She refused to tell him the state of her heart. He failed to keep an appointment, and in her wrath she refused to accept his apologies. "Of course," she writes, "I was not responsible for my words then."

That my dear, is where you are mistaken. There comes the time in no man's or woman's life when he or she is not responsible for every word spoken. This notion of claiming irresponsibility because of temper is akin to the plea of temporary insanity made by a murderer.

Rebuffed, he stopped calling. Then she began to miss him and asked him to call. He appeared delighted at the invitation but never called.

"There is no sweetness in lovers' quarrels," wrote Edward Bulwer-Lytton, "that compensates the stings." "Miss Impulsive" should sign herself "Miss Temper." The mistake is a common one. All who are quick-tempered claim to be impulsive instead. There is nothing "Miss Impulsive" can do but benefit by the experience.

Another One.
"Perplexed" writes, "I am twenty-one and for the past two years have kept company with a man of the same age whom I love very much."

About a month ago we had a slight disagreement and he told me it would be best for us not to see each other, as we were having too many arguments. A month has passed and I cannot forget him. I have now made the acquaintance of another young man who has asked to take me out, but my mother objects, as she thinks it is not right for me to go out so soon after having been with the other young man so long.

You love the first man and it seems that you have lost him. Under the circumstances, the attention of the second young man seems almost providential. "Jealousy," writes F. Marion Crawford, "is the forerunner of love, and often its awakener."

Perhaps the knowledge that another man seeks you may awaken the first man to the danger of losing you. If you are not willing to try this means, write him a note telling him that, so far as you are concerned, there will be no more arguments. But can you do it, knowing that this means you will never have your say for the rest of your life? To marry a man with whom one argues through the engagement is like undertaking a long journey when all signs point to a storm.

"Argument," my dear, is a word that means nothing more nor less after marriage than quarrels.

Kissing Promiscuously.
"I am eighteen," writes R. S., "and I am earnestly in love with a man one year my senior. I know he loves me, as he has declared himself many times. I have been keeping company with him for eleven months. This week he called on me, and when he was about to depart he attempted to kiss me, when I resisted and refused him. Please tell me if I did right by refusing, as he has turned very cold since."

The foolish fellow thought that a kiss was the proof of love. He does not know that if every kiss proved love, one would be single hearted. You love him, but you want the engagement ring on your finger before you kiss him and you are right.

The girl who kisses freely is in danger of kissing promiscuously, and the man always tells.

He has professed his love for you. Can you not ask him, my dear, if that means he wants you to be his wife? For under no other conditions may you kiss him. I am sure the law that governs loving will give you this right without stamping you as forward or unmaidenly.
